

In the wake of the pandemic, we are going to see consumers enter a state of "Flourishing" – looking towards greener beginnings and the new meanings of life around them. The homes that we have grounded ourselves in over the past two years have become havens, our partnership with Mother Earth has become one that focuses on reciprocity with her beauty, as well as functionality. Our knowledge of our ancestral foundations and primordial functions have strengthened, thus in Fall 22/23 we are seeking a newfound depth of understanding the primal and purposeful functions of design.

How will our current reality validate this forecast?

- With sustainability top of mind post-pandemic consumers will be focused on brand transparency and their circular economy standards. No longer will we support brands that do not act in reciprocity with nature.
- Returning to more primitive ways of life are top of mind for consumers, as they look towards their own heritage and ancestry to find new forms of tradition.
- Craftsmanship and personalization behind the work becomes the new luxury, as the story behind the product and a personal tie towards its creation becomes more valued than an overall theme.

CASA TER

Architecture

Named 'Casa Ter', the latest housing project in Spain's Costa Brava hinterland by Barcelona-based firm MESURA is a site specific contemporary residence combining local building traditions and natural materials. With striking architecture and a classic Mediterranean character, the house blends neatly with the natural landscapes it looks out to.

Architect

CLAYTON KORTE

Cave House

San Antonio architecture firm, Clayton Korte, dives deep into the hills of Texas - designing a one of kind wine cellar that is tucked away in a limestone cave so it disappears into the surrounding landscape.

Lighting Designer

BENNET SCHLESINGER

Exhibit

Southern California-based Bennet Schlesinger, who designs under the name Lightsong Exchange, designs with equal parts pounded ceramics and delicate bamboo shade. These wildly popular compositions give a new found definition to soft lighting.
